Capitol Connection Q&A for Contractors

Week of 3/24/14

By Shauna Krause of Capitol Services, Inc.

Many contractors are taking advantage of California now allowing operations as a Limited Liability Company. However, keeping the license number you had for years might be an issue. But first, another contractor discovers a way to 'waive' the exam in qualifying a new corporate license...

Q: We are currently exploring the options to obtain a Class "B" contractor's license. My father is currently serving as an Officer under a Corporate license (also a "B") and has been since Jan. 2008. He currently does not have a license himself and is looking at his options to obtain one. Due to his limited English he has struggled with examination itself, and from my own understanding he potentially qualifies for an examination waiver. Unfortunately that's where my confusion begins. It seems there are a variety of options, particularly replacing and becoming the new Responsible Managing Officer (RMO). But before I go further let me explain our intentions. We intend to incorporate a new business and run a separate company entirely once his license is obtained, as we no longer plan on working with the individuals that are part of the current Corporate contractor's license, and we are all in agreement to dissolve the current corporation in the future. So my question is what exactly are our options to make my father the RMO of the new corporation? What is the cost?

A: Since your father has been listed on the current license as an Officer for over five years he can apply to replace the Qualifier and request to waive the exams. I understand that your intentions are to apply for a new corporate license, however in order to waive the exams your father will need to first replace the Qualifier on the existing license. Once he is listed as the RMO, he can then go apply under a separate company as the qualifying individual without needing to take the exams since he will already be considered "Qualified".

The State fee to replace the Qualifying Individual is $75.00. The State fee for the new corporate license is $480.00 for one classification. If you, or anyone else, needs help with this process just give us a call.

Q: We currently have a corporate contractor's license that we want to change to a Limited Liability Company (LLC). Are we required to convert the corporation to an LLC with the Secretary of State in order to keep the same contractor's license number, or can we form a new LLC while keeping the existing corporation in existence? We want to have the license number transferred from the corporation to the LLC, but we want to keep the corporation in existence with the Secretary of State in order to keep selling our product. The corporation will not be doing any installs.

A: The CSLB allows a corporate license number to be reissued to an LLC if the following conditions exist: 1) The corporate license is in good standing immediately before its cancellation in connection with the application for an LLC license; 2) The LLC was formed by a corporation to continue the business of the corporation subsequent to the cancellation of the corporate entity's license, and; 3) The personnel listed for each entity are the same.

The law does not stipulate that it must be converted, so as long as you meet the three requirements above, you can keep your existing corporation in place to use for other purposes not related to performing construction work and transfer the corporation's license number to the newly formed LLC.

While knowledge is power, knowing where to go for the answers is half the battle. Working Safely Around Forklifts

Forklift vehicles are not like automobiles; they're about twice as heavy, due to the counterbalance weight needed to carry large loads. Because forklifts are so heavy, when a pedestrian worker gets injured by a forklift vehicle, the injury is often very serious and sometimes fatal. To avoid becoming a victim of a forklift accident, be constantly aware of the forklift activities around you both in your immediate work area and in other areas of the workplace you may need to go. Forklifts don't maneuver like automobiles. Forklifts can turn in a very small radius. They're rear-wheel driven, so their rear end swings out wider than an automobile's pathway. So, always give a forklift PLENTY of room to maneuver. Don't stand near a forklift when it begins to move. Their extra weight means a forklift can't stop as fast as an auto. Don't try to squeeze by an operating forklift; their unexpected movements can crush you between the vehicle and a stationary object.

Forklifts have limited visibility. The forks and lifting mechanism block the line of sight for the driver. If there's a load on the lift, visibility is even more limited. So, it's up to YOU, the pedestrian, to watch for and avoid forklifts. Don't rely on the forklift driver to see you. If you MUST move around near an active forklift, maintain eye contact with the driver at all times. And, always provide enough space for the forklift to move safely out of your way. Never stand near or under loaded forklift tines/forks. Forklifts can drop their load or knock over a stack of materials, causing a possible caught/crush injury. Always wait until a forklift is idle and the parking brake is ON, before entering an active forklift working zone. Evaluate work areas around you to ensure that forklift activities can't impact you. For example, a forklift in one aisle can push a product off a shelf from that side of the aisle into the adjacent aisle you may be in and crush you. Listen carefully and look both ways before you step out from an aisle, around a corner, or across a pathway. Avoid crossing in front of a moving forklift and don't try to "beat" one to a crossing. Install mirrors in blind entry areas to help pedestrians and forklift drivers keep track of each other. Paint wide, safe pathways on work area floors to separate pedestrians from forklift travels zones. Adequate lighting can also ensure that drivers and pedestrians see each other.

Finally, stay alert and work at a safe pace; distracted or hurrying workers and quick paced forklift driving can lead to an accident or injury. Get periodic training on forklift safety to remember safe work practices and the consequences if you don't follow them. If there are forklifts present where you work, think about your surroundings and how you can keep yourself safe from a forklift injury.
